Course Overview

'Social theory' refers to two things. On the first level, it is theory of the other; that is, it is theorizations by social scientists about the people, places and things they study, primarily for the edification of other social scientists. Secondly, it is also theory from the other; that is, it is theory produced by those in colonial and postcolonial situations to account for the ways that their people, places, and things have been changed by the imperial and industrial encounters of the high and late colonial phases (ca. 1600-1950 CE). This course is intended to introduce students to these two bodies of literature, their assumptions, overlaps and tensions. The readings and lectures span continents, and draw together disparate strains of social theory to think about the current condition of social theory, as well as the futures that social theory is confronting and producing through the collaborative fusions and postcolonial challenges of producing social theory in a multi-cultural world.

This course is ostensibly organized around divisions – between men and women, between colonizer and colonized, between North and South, between modern and traditional, between anthropologist and interlocutor. It is non-linear in its presentation, moving between present and past, past and present, and between multiple contemporary points from around the globe. Rather than approach this course as if there is an agreed upon canon of social theory, the design of this course embraces polyphony and conversation; there is no one history or survey of social theory, but many simultaneous, often contradictory and mutually-oblivious conversations. The arrangement of readings is meant to replicate this, staging conversations between anthropologists and non-anthropologists, from one continent to another, between parts of the Global South (Africa-Latin America; South Asia-Australia) and between the Global South and the North Atlantic (Africa-Europe; USA-Latin America).

Students will prepare weekly reading guides and complete a research paper based upon the identification of a problem in social theory. Upon completion of the course, students should have a robust understanding of contemporary theoretical concerns in cultural anthropology and related fields, including but not limited to: indigenouness and cosmopolitanism, race and ethnicity, tradition and custom, modernity and postmodernity, globalization and economic forms, and the category of the human.

Learning Outcomes

Students in C courses will

1. Demonstrate understanding of course content through formal academic writing
2. Construct effective prose that demonstrates critical thinking and advances sound conclusions, appropriate to the course and discipline
3. Demonstrate the ability to revise and improve their writing in both form and content

Students in O courses will demonstrate

1. Proficiency in oral presentations
2. The ability to improve oral presentations in response to critiques
3. Skill in listening to and critiquing oral presentations

Students in G courses will

1. Demonstrate knowledge of how two or more distinctive world regions have influenced and interacted with one another and how such interactions have been informed by their respective cultures or civilizations.

Reading List:

Books are available at the campus bookstore. All other readings will be made available through myCourses.

Cesaire, Aime. Discourse on Colonialism. Translated by Joan Pinkham. New York: Monthly Review Press, 2000.

Dubal, Sam. Against Humanity. Berkeley, CA: University of California Press, 2019.

Foucault, Michel. The History of Sexuality. R. Hurley, transl. Volume 1. New York: Vintage, 1990 [1976].

Memmi, Albert. Racism. Translated by Steve Martinot. Minneapolis, MN: University of Minnesota Press, 2000.

Povinelli, Elizabeth. The Empire of Love: Toward a Theory of Intimacy, Genealogy, and Carnality. Durham: Duke University Press, 2006.

Smith, Linda Tuhiwai. Decolonizing Methodologies: Research and Indigenous Peoples. London: Zed Books, 2012.

Smith-Morris, Carolyn. Indigenous Communalism: Belonging, Healthy Communities, and Decolonizing the Collective. Baltimore, MD: Johns Hopkins University Press, 2019.

Stewart-Harawira, Makere. The New Imperial Order: Indigenous Responses to Globalization. New York: Zed Books, 2005.

Stoler, Ann Laura. *Race and the Education of Desire: Foucault's History of Sexuality and the Colonial Order of Things*. Durham, NC: Duke University Press, 1995.

Trouillot, Michel-Rolph. Global Transformations: Anthropology and the Modern World. New York: Palgrave Macmillan, 2003.

Grading & Assignments:

Reading Guides (20 @ 1 point each; 20%) – Students are encouraged to complete at least 2 reading guides each week during weeks 2-13, and a total of 20 reading guides over the course of the semester. There are more points available for Reading Guides [34] than required Reading Guides, so students have some latitude in which readings they submit Reading Guides for. Reading Guides must be turned in to the instructor at the beginning of class in which the reading is discussed. Late Reading Guides will not be accepted for credit. Throughout the semester, there are three readings that are worth 2 points, and are noted. The Reading Guide is included as Appendix A.

Oral Presentations (2 @ 10%) – Students will initially present on their identified paper topic (see below) and the resources they intend to draw on to address the topic. These presentations will be short (2 written pages, ~5 minutes), and students will receive written feedback from the instructor and peers. During the last week of class, students will give longer presentations (4-5 written pages, ~10 minutes) summarizing the argument of their final paper, the evidence that they have drawn upon, and the conclusions they have reached. Again, students will receive written feedback from the instructor and peers. In both cases, students will be graded on their effectiveness in communicating their ideas, the coherence of the presentation, and their ability to engage the audience. Presentations cannot be rescheduled; if you miss your presentation, you will receive a failing grade in the course.

15-Page Final Paper, broken into these components (50% total):

Identify a Theoretical Problem (5%) – Based on the readings during the first month of class, identify a theoretical problem that has been addressed by theorists from different geographic and historical backgrounds. This might be a theoretical problem apparent in politics, media, literature, history, etc. It should be a real thing, i.e. not something only in fiction, and there should be enough material about it to base a paper on it. In 300 words, what is the problem, and how has social theory been used to discuss it? That is, who is the problem a problem for and what will understanding it solve? How does the problem relate to the course content?

Identify Resources (5%) – What kinds of research are you going to conduct to explore the history and actual or potential ramifications of the problem you have identified? Who has talked about the idea and how have they talked about it? You'll need to identify the resources that will lead to the successful completion of your research project: which course materials can you draw on? are there books and academic journals you can consult? archives that you can access? In 300 words, you'll need to discuss your proposed methods in completing your research project's data collection, what secondary and primary sources you can consult, and how these sources will inform your research.

Thesis & Argumentation (5%) – In a paragraph (~200 words), make an interpretive argument about your research findings. Are you making an historical argument? an ethnographic one? a cross-cultural one? How does the argument relate to the resources you will be drawing upon to make your argument? In another paragraph, discuss the contrary positions to your argument; that is, argue against yourself. What are the weaknesses in your argument? How might other people read the same evidence differently than you propose to? How have other people argued about similar evidence in the past?

First Five Pages (10%) – Write the first five pages of your research paper (~1500 words). In these pages, you should have a compelling introduction (provide a description of the concept and its powers), as well as the statement of your thesis, and a discussion of your research methods. In addition, you should provide a map of your paper – what are the sections and how are they organized? how does each section relate to your argument? Discuss each section in a paragraph or more. What do you imagine your conclusion discussing?

Rough Draft (10%) – Building on your First Five Pages, you will complete a full rough draft of your paper. Each section needs to be fully written, including the presentation of evidence, your discussion and interpretation of the evidence, and an articulation of how the evidence relates to your overall argument and fits into the structure of the paper. You will also complete a draft of your conclusion, in which you will discuss the implications for the problem that you have identified. Each section should be at least five pages long, and the conclusion should be at least two pages long. The Rough Draft will be read and commented upon by the instructor.

Final Rough Draft (5%) – The Final Rough Draft must incorporate the comments of the instructor from your Rough Draft, and represents the final version of your paper. The paper should be complete for all intents and purposes, including a completed introduction, sections, and conclusion, and full citations and bibliography.

Peer Reviews (2 @ 5% each) – First read this, on the ‘elements of productive peer review’: <http://bit.ly/2htngrT>. You will be randomly assigned two papers to read, and you are required to turn in a peer review for two of your peers. Each peer review should be 500-700 words long, and discuss the author’s argument, use of evidence, persuasiveness, and coherence. Additionally, you may choose to identify issues in your peers’ writing style. Late peer reviews will not be accepted for credit, but must be turned in to receive a grade for your final paper.

Final Paper & Response to Peer Reviews (10%) – In no less than 300 words, you should prepare a document that outlines how you have chosen to address (or not address) each of the concerns raised by the peer reviewers. You may either complete this in one or two documents. Your Final Paper should incorporate these changes as well, and you should address how you have included the critiques into your paper.

Grading Scale

A	93-100
A-	90-92.9
B+	87-89.9
B	83-86.9
B-	80-82.9

C+	77-79.9
C	73-76.9
C-	70-72.9
D	60-69.9
F	0-59.9

Policies:

Students taking the course Pass/Fail must earn a C to receive a Pass.

Workload: This course is a 4-credit course, which means that in addition to the scheduled lectures, students are expected to do at least 9.5 hours of course-related work each week during the semester. This includes things like: completing assigned readings, participating in lab sessions, studying for tests and examinations, preparing written assignments, completing internship or clinical placement requirements, and other tasks that must be completed to earn credit in the course.¹ I assume that undergraduate students can read 1 page of academic writing in 3 minutes; 100 pages of reading should require about 300 minutes, or 5 hours. You may need to read some of the texts more than once to fully understand them. In most cases, you should expect to be reading about 125-150 pages per week (approximately 6 hours) in addition to other course requirements.

Please note: You do not need to complete all of the readings, viewings, & podcasts to receive a passing grade in this course. The syllabus is designed to allow for student choice and to facilitate your interests. This means that you can skip individual readings or whole weeks' worth of content. But this also means that you need to plan appropriately. DO NOT wait until there are only the required number of Guides remaining; life events happen and if you regularly turn in Guides, you will have a buffer in case anything comes up.

Zoom meeting policies: All of our class meetings will be held through Zoom. Class meetings will not be recorded. You may leave your video off, and should have your audio muted unless you are speaking. I encourage you to keep your video feed on—students report much more positive experiences in classes when they visually participate.

Disability-related Equal Access Accommodations: Students wishing to request academic accommodations to insure their equitable access and participation in this course should notify the instructor as soon as they are aware of their need for such arrangements. Authorizations from Services for Students with Disabilities (SSD) are generally required.

We encourage you to contact SSD at 607-777-2686 to schedule an appointment with the Director or Learning Disabilities Specialist. The SSD website (www.binghamton.edu/ssd) includes information regarding their Disability Documentation Guidelines. The office is located in UU-119.

Academic Integrity – Academic misconduct of any sort will not be tolerated. Evidence of academic misconduct – which is not limited to plagiarism and cheating – will result in an immediate failing grade in the course and actions as dictated by university policy regarding academic integrity for undergraduate students.²

Contacting Me: I only check my email between 9-11 AM on weekday mornings and during my office hours. I will always respond to emails within 24 hours, except for emails received on Fridays, which will be responded to on the following Monday. If you plan to stop by my office hours, please contact me ahead of time, either by email (mwolfmey@binghamton.edu) or in person before or after class. I am happy to set up a time to meet during normal business hours (i.e. Monday-Friday, 9 AM-5 PM).

Correspondence with instructor: Only correspondence that follows professional conventions of correspondence will be replied to by me. For example, your email should begin 'Dear Professor Wolf-Meyer,...' and end with your signature. Beginning an email without a salutation, a 'Hey' or other informal forms of address will ensure your email will not be responded to. If the answer to your question is clearly stated in the syllabus or assignment guidelines, instructors may not respond to your email.

Style Matters: All written work should be double-spaced, 12 point font, in Times New Roman, with 1 inch margins on all sides, and page numbers. Citation should look like this: (Author Year: Page), e.g. (Wolf-Meyer 2009: 408). Failure to meet these standards will result in a reduced grade.

A Note about Pedagogy: All education research supports that regular, steady work helps students develop the skills needed to succeed in their educational programs. This runs counter to ideas about innate skill and aptitude. Instead, practice is the goal. This course is designed to help you practice critical reading and research writing skills. To that end, the Guides help hone your attention to key elements of scholarly and popular writing with the aim of improving your skills.

Appendix A: Reading Guide for Non-Fiction

For each reading, you will need to fill out this form. Bring your Reading Guide to class to receive credit and ensure that you understand each reading. Reading Guides must be submitted through myCourses prior to the beginning of class to receive full credit.

1. Who is the author? What kind of background are they coming from (e.g. anthropology, history, sociology, economics, philosophy, literature)? Who is their primary audience?
2. Identify the author's thesis.
3. What are the key concepts used? List them; provide definitions and citations. Are concepts challenged or invented?
4. Who is cited? Why? Are ideas being borrowed or contested?
5. How does the author engage with the evidence they are discussing? What kinds of evidence do they focus on to aid their argument? How and what do they draw from evidence to make their point?
6. Discuss a passage (citing page number) that inspired you or frustrated you. Then type out a paragraph or two (160-300 words) discussing that passage (citing page number) and describing how it resonated or clashed with other course content (which might be a discussion or another text).
7. Prepare a question for discussion by the class. Your question should reference a specific section of the reading and relate to broader course themes and concerns.
